The Anji Boutique Hotel sits on an isolated hill in the middle of a golf course resort. The journey to the hotel winds through the golf course and traverses the hill to arrive at the top of the ridge in the base of a monolithic stone plinth that appears to grow out of the ridge. The reception, lobby, restaurant, conference room and SPA are axially arranged in a series of pavilions above the plinth, taking advantage of 360 degree views over the golf course and surrounding forested hillsides. The hotel accommodation is set in a series of villa clusters that dot the hillside stepping with the terrain towards the golf course in the valley below. A grouping of serviced high end single villas occupies an adjacent ridge, branded with the hotel.
